

Essays about Brain Drain & Joblessness

Page 1/2

Things you should know in this course:

- Article about brain drain
- Things a jobless person can do to get a job

1. Article about brain drain

Today, day by day, millions of people from all over the world continue on moving from rural areas into more urbanised areas, such as big cities. Most migrations take place in developing countries, possibly due to lower standards of living, lower wages and less job opportunities. What do you think ?

Dear Director,

I have read some of your articles and I have been interested at one of them which is about the advantages of brain drain in developing countries and I do agree with you.

It's true that brain drain contributes to the development of countries and especially poor countries. In fact, emigrants send home much currency. It's also true that emigrants often return to their mother country with greater skills and as a result, they can pass the experiences they acquired abroad to their young compatriots.

But, looked at from another angle, brain drain sometimes have a bad effect on developing countries. To start with, the brain drain is a waste of money. For example, the investments in education remain fruitless. Added to that, it is difficult for the country to grow if it continues to lose its talented human resources. Also, developing countries always lack the necessary qualified labor force to improve their economies and guarantee a better life of their nationals.

I do believe that brain drain is a mixed blessing and I hope you agree with me don't you?

Sincerely

2. What can a jobless person do to get a job

Introduction

Working is the only source of income for many people and this is why unemployment becomes a huge problem.

Main Body: Solutions to the problem of joblessness

- To look for job ads and apply for any job offer that suits his qualifications
- To do some training and acquire more skills to become more employable
- To get a loan, a credit and start his / her own project
- To ask someone with good networks to pull some strings for him / her
- To emigrate
- To contact the job center or unemployment agencies

Conclusion

It is important to look for different ways to find a job and improve one's skills to multiply the chances to be hired and play an important role in the communities.